

THE BENEFITS OF OPERATING A LIMITED COMPANY

Trading as a Limited Company has many benefits for the individuals involved. Possibly the most advantageous of these is the greater flexibility and opportunity for efficient tax planning.

HIGHER TAKE HOME PAY

A Limited company offers greater flexibility and more options when it comes to the taxation of profits and personal income.

As a sole trader, you are taxed on all the business profits in the year in which they arise. Income tax is charged at 20% on profits up to £34,500, 40% on profits between £34,501 and £150,000 and 45% on profits above £150,000. A limited company by contrast will pay corporation tax at a fixed rate of 19% on all the profits.

As a company shareholder you also have more control over the level of taxation, as you can decide on the amounts and timings of salary and dividends you are paid in the tax year. The advantage that dividends have over salary, is that the first £2,000 is tax-free, then tax becoming due at 7.5% up to £34,500, then 32.5% between £34,501 and £150,000 and over £150,000 at 38.1%. Unlike salary, dividends are not subject to National Insurance for either the employee or the employer, which is a huge advantage.

TAX RELIEF ON EXPENSES

Expenditure incurred wholly in conjunction with running the business can be claimed back as an expense. Trading via limited company means you can claim a wide range of expenses such as accountancy fees, computers, software, phones, travel and many more. Please see our Contractors Guide to Expenses for more information.

LIMITED LIABILITY

The shareholders of the Limited Company are only liable for company debts to the nominal value of the share capital held. Given that most small Limited Companies operate with a paid share capital of £1 this can offer added financial security when compared to other trading options as your personal assets are not at risk.

A Limited Company is treated as a separate legal entity to its members. This has the benefit that any finance raised or contracts entered into are the responsibility of the company. It also adds a level of security because the company name is protected by law, meaning that no other company can use the same name, which could be damaging to your company.

PERCEPTION & CREDIBILITY

Operating as a Limited Company can provide a business with a more credible and established image, thus potentially making it easier to secure a contract with a client, trade with suppliers or even raise finance. It gives customers and suppliers' confidence in dealing with you and in some instances third parties may even make the decision not to deal with a business that is not incorporated.

TAX PLANNING

From being to set your own salary and paying dividends, a limited company offers flexible tax planning opportunities. For example, you can fund employees' executive pensions as a legitimate business expense. This can offer a tax advantage over those who are running their business as self-employed.

SUCCESSION PLANNING

When looking to exit from a business, it is often easier to transfer ownership of a limited company than another type of business. This could be to a family member or child.
